Making a telehealth appointment? You might still pay a facility fee is a story in The Washington Post by Markian Hawryluk about how patients can be billed without ever stepping foot in a hospital, but several states are starting to crack down.

How a Texas judge's Affordable Care Act ruling could impact health insurance coverage in Colorado is a post in The Colorado Sun by John Ingold about how Colorado law protects coverage for preventive services – but that protection doesn't extend to all insurance plans in the state.

Georgia kids in foster care face obstacles to access mental health services is a story in The Atlanta Journal-Constitution by Carrie Teegardin about how children suffer as state fails to monitor Medicaid contractor paid billions to cover and coordinate health care.

The big squeeze: ACA health insurance has lots of customers, small networks is an NPR story by Julie Appleby that reports a federal report found that 243 of 375 insurance company plans failed to meet network standards relative to accurate provider lists.

How gun violence in Colorado hit a 40-year high, explained in six charts is a story in The Colorado Sun by John Ingold about how Colorado in 2021 recorded its highest firearm-related death rate in at least 40 years.

Assessment of Reported Time to Access a Loaded Gun Among Colorado Adolescents is a research letter posted on JAMA Pediatrics by Virginia McCarthy and colleagues about a study by Colorado researchers that aimed to learn from adolescents how long it would take to get and be ready to fire a loaded gun without a parent or other adult's permission?

More than 300,000 Coloradans could soon lose Medicaid coverage. Here's what to know. is a post in The Colorado Sun by John Ingold about how the newspaper is hosting a free, virtual panel discussion to talk about the end of the federal public health emergency and how people can find new health insurance coverage.

America's teens are in crisis. States are racing to respond is an opinion piece that includes data from the CDC's Youth Risk Behavior Survey that shows that 42% of high school students report persistent feelings of sadness or hopelessness and 22% say they seriously considered attempting suicide in 2021. And it's much worse among girls.

Current Causes of Deaths in Children and Adolescents in the United States is a letter to the editor in the New England Journal of Medicine by Dr. Jason E. Goldstick and colleagues about the fact that the CDC recently released updated official mortality data that showed 45,222 firearm-related deaths in the United States in 2020, a new peak. The authors state that the current funding momentum for the prevention of community violence must be maintained.
