

School of Medicine

UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO ANSCHUTZ MEDICAL CAMPUS

October 1 – 7, 2021

Distributed by the University of Colorado School of Medicine

“She is such a puzzle”: Colorado teen’s months-long ordeal spotlights mysteries of long COVID

“Is it going to be months? Is it going to be forever?” said Nathan Rabinovitch, a pediatric immunologist at National Jewish Health [professor of pediatrics at CU School of Medicine] and one of Lilly’s physicians. “We don’t know yet because we are so early in the pandemic.”

Denver Post, Oct. 1, 2021

Once Again, Some States Are Choosing Who Gets COVID-19 Care

Matthew Wynia, director of the Center for Bioethics and Humanities at the University of Colorado School of Medicine, said individual doctors should not have to decide who might receive certain resources when they may not be as focused on how many resources are available more broadly. “You want the doctor at the bedside to be able to serve as the advocate for their patient,” Wynia said. “You don’t want them being the judge deciding between their patients.”

Center for Public Integrity, Oct. 7, 2021

5 recent developments that give doctors hope in the fight against COVID

The battle against COVID-19 is far from over, but Colorado doctors said there are five recent developments that make them hopeful. “We have a bunch of new stuff coming in the pipeline,” said Michelle Barron, the senior medical director of infection prevention at UHealth [and professor of medicine at CU School of Medicine].

Fox31, Oct. 5, 2021

Pregnant people urged to get vaccinated amid abysmal US inoculation rates

“I felt very comfortable with the benefits of the vaccine, and the importance of getting it to protect both myself and my daughter, because that was one of the few things I could do to protect her,” said Anna Euser, an obstetrician/gynecologist and an associate professor of maternal fetal medicine for the University of Colorado School of Medicine. “This was really the one strategy we have to try to protect both ourselves and our children.”

The Guardian, Oct. 2, 2021

It's time to start talking with family about COVID and the holidays

“If you decide you’re hosting and your rules are ‘no one comes unless you’re vaccinated’ and have no symptoms, then that should be the rule,” Michelle Barron, the senior medical director of infection prevention at UCHHealth, said.

“I think understanding where individuals are and being understanding is most important,” Liz Chamberlain, a licensed psychologist at the CU Anschutz Health and Wellness Center, said.

Fox31, Oct. 4, 2021

The pandemic has more people turning to a “therapist in your pocket”

Many providers have been using virtual tools for decades, according to Jay Shore, a psychiatry professor at the University of Colorado who chairs the American Psychiatric Association’s Committee on Telepsychiatry. “I’ve had patients I’ve treated for 20 years that I’ve never met in person and feel like we have good relationships — wonderful relationships, that would be the same in person,” he said.

Marketplace, Oct. 6, 2021

Child Fatalities Linked to OTC Cold and Cough Meds Described

Laurie Seidel Halmo [assistant professor of pediatrics] from the University of Colorado Anschutz Medical Campus in Aurora, and colleagues describe fatalities associated with exposures to CCMs in children younger than 12 years that were detected by a safety surveillance system from 2008 to 2016 (the Pediatric Cough and Cold Safety Surveillance System).

HealthDay, Oct. 4, 2021

Guntupalli helping patients live full, active lives

“We’ve made progress in cancer care.” Saketh Guntupalli said. “We’ve increased survival, but we’d like to increase cure rates even more so women can live their lives to the fullest, however they want to live it.” Based out of University of Colorado Health in Aurora, Colorado, Guntupalli currently travels to Regional West Physicians Clinic-Women’s Center in Scottsbluff once a month to see patients and perform surgical procedures.

Star-Herald (Scottsbluff, Neb.), Oct. 5, 2021

Psychiatry in the Year 2500: Lessons Learned From History

Column by Joel Yager, professor in the Department of Psychiatry, University of Colorado School of Medicine, Anschutz Medical Campus: “For the past decade, I have taught 6-hour annual seminars on the history of psychiatry to psychiatric residents....Through this seminar, my residents and I have come to realize that each generation’s members, ourselves included, look back on earlier psychiatric concepts and practices, from the ancients right through recent times, with a mixture of bemusement, pity, and horror.”

Psychiatric Times, Oct. 6, 2021

Opinion: In 1993, Colorado lost a Black pioneer in medicine. Now it has lost his Denver home

More than six decades passed between the founding of the University of Colorado School of Medicine and 1947—when Charles Blackwood, the school’s first Black graduate, walked with his diploma in the top ten of his class.

Colorado Sun, Oct. 3, 2021