HOW YOU D.O.I.N.?

Ways To Stay In Touch And Share The Love!

While things are beginning to settle post-worst-COVID, many of our DFM colleagues are sharing that they long for more connection to each other and the department.

Some have come back to the office while others remain remote. Whatever your situation, there are ways to keep the lines of communication open and to spread some cheer.

First, feel free to share updates from your corner of the department. It's easy. Just click the button below to share your story, update, or news.

Remember, the form is behind the University firewall, so you will have to either connect via DUP Global Protect or be on campus and logged into the system to access the intranet.**

Share Your News

You can also pay tribute to your DFM co-workers via the DFM intranet and the Way To Go section.

Way To Go!

Do you have something nice to say about a colleague? This is the place to do it.

Here's how. Just click on "Add new announcement", then type your comment. Be sure to start with the person's name - for example, "John Doe, you are the best..."

Share the positive energy and the love!

Professional Development Pro Tip!

Developing your emotional intelligence (EI) can help you succeed at any stage of your life or career. It can also help you become a better leader, mentor, and coach. Learning how to understand others' perspectives, balance empathy with accountability, demonstrate active listening, and respond appropriately to a variety of verbal and nonverbal cues, are all important factors in growing your EI skillset.

LinkedIn Learning offers a wide variety of courses that explore emotional intelligence and the role it plays in our communication. Not sure where to begin? Try watching this LinkedIn Learning course, "Communicating with Emotional Intelligence."

LinkedIn Learning offers thousands of FREE courses – access it through the portal and see what new thing you can learn today!

Family Medicine Is Positioned Best To Address Child Maltreatment, IF ONLY IT WOULD!

Learn about and understand the impact of neighborhood and community on child maltreatment and the primary care clinician's role in developing community approaches to prevention and treatment of those affected by child abuse and neglect. And an opportunity to discuss how inadequate our health care involvement has been for families.
